AI-ASSISTED PLAIN-LANGUAGE SUMMARY

To the family of Ravi Kumar, we understand that this is a difficult and stressful time for you. Based on the details of FIR/2024/001, the most important thing to know is that all the charges currently against Ravi are "bailable." This means that being released from custody is his legal right. Unlike more serious cases where a judge has to decide whether or not to grant bail, in bailable cases, the law requires that the person be released as long as they can provide the necessary bond or guarantee. Since he is at the very beginning of this process, it is important to move quickly to exercise this right.

There are three specific parts of the new law, the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita (BNSS), that protect Ravi's rights. First, Section 436 BNSS states that for bailable offenses, the police or the court must release the accused person on bail. Second, Section 187 BNSS sets a strict deadline for the police; if they do not file their final investigation report (charge sheet) within 60 days, Ravi becomes entitled to "default bail," regardless of the evidence. Finally, Section 479 BNSS ensures that no one is kept in jail indefinitely without a trial. It states that if an undertrial prisoner spends half of the maximum possible sentence in jail (or one-third for first-time offenders), they must be released.

Your next step should be to arrange for a licensed advocate to file a bail application under Section 436 BNSS as soon as possible. If you cannot afford a private lawyer, you have the right to free legal help. Please visit the District Legal Services Authority (DLSA), also known as the Zila Vidhi Seva Pradhikaran, located at your local court complex. They can provide a lawyer at no cost to help you with the paperwork and represent Ravi. Please remember that while the law is on his side in bailable cases, every case depends on the specific facts presented in court, and this explanation does not guarantee a specific outcome.

Please consult with a licensed advocate before taking any legal action.
